ABSTRACT

This study aims to analyze the influence of the role of fraud specialists in the implementation of internal control through the mediation of credit card fraud detection in one of the state-owned banks in Jakarta. This study used a census method so that the entire population will be used as the respondents, namely fraud specialists and internal audits at one of the state-owned banks in Jakarta that specialize in handling credit card fraud. The data in this study used primary data obtained from questionnaires given to respondents. Primary data were analyzed using a structural equation model, namely Partial Least Square (PLS). The results of this study indicate that the role of fraud specialists influences the detection of credit card fraud as a mediator variable, as does the detection of credit card fraud influencing the implementation of internal control. However, the role of fraud specialists does not significantly influence the implementation of the company's internal control. There must be other supporting factors in the company.
