ABSTRACT

Making public service advertisements is something that writers do to help provide education about the importance of sunbathing not only during the Covid-19 pandemic but also after that, it is hoped that it can become a routine activity every day. A scriptwriter who works after the production process also has preparations before the production process. The making of a public service advertisement "Let's just take 5 minutes, sunbathing is fun" is expected to convey a message that people can realize that sunbathing is also important to do.

This writer focuses more on the scriptwriter section, how a scriptwriter is able to create a work that is then visualized so that it can be enjoyed by the general public.

This public service advertisement "Let's just take 5 minutes, sunbathing is fun" talks about how people carry out sunbathing activities, starting from housewives, students, office employees, and hospital medical personnel. By doing some stretching, it is hoped that sunbathing activities can provide benefits in the form of increasing body immunity and getting vitamin D which is good for the skin and human body.

Based on the research and the process of making an applicative public service ads it can be concluded that: (1) In the process of making a public service advertisement "Let's just take 5 minutes, sunbathing is fun" the process of making public service advertisements goes through stages starting from the pre-service stage, production, to post-production, and writers as scriptwriters are more active in the pre-production and post-production processes; (2) public service advertisements "Let's just take 5 minutes, sunbathing is fun" helps researchers in increasing their scriptwriting skills in public service advertisements with non-musical drama genres.
