This research aims to look at the relationship between passion, workload and work-school conflict among working students. The population in this study were students who were actively studying and working in the Jakarta area. This research uses a correlational quantitative research method. The results showed that the passion variables, that is harmonious and obsessive, were not related to the occurrence of work-school conflict, furthermore, the workload variable also did not have a significant relationship with work-school conflict. However, obsessive passion is positively related to workload.
